These experiences can't be explained by the Filter Theory, suggesting that other factors (e.g. the type of relationship) play a significant role in the initiation and development of relationships. Kerckhoff and Davis (1962) have suggested that similarity of social backgrounds, interests, attitudes and complementarity of needs creates attraction. However, some researchers claim that this direction of causality should be reversed.

Interpersonal attraction as a part of social psychology is the study of the attraction between people which leads to the development of platonic or romantic relationships. It is distinct from perceptions such as physical attractiveness, and involves views of what is and what is not considered beautiful or attractive. Within the study of social psychology, interpersonal attraction is related to how much one likes, dislikes, or hates someone. It can be viewed as a force acting between two people t
